

MEASURING AND ASSESSING RELIGIOUS FUNDAMENTALISM AND LIBERAL VALUES AMONG ISRAELI JEWS AND ISRAELI MUSLIM ARABS

Survey methodology and frequency distribution

The survey interviewed a sample of 2,445 Israeli Jews and 1,005 Israeli Muslims. It was conducted in December 2023. The study was funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation and supervised by Mansoor Moaddel (PI), the University of Maryland – College Park; Julia Elad-Strenger (Co-PI), Bar Ilan University; Samer Halaby (Research Consultant), Academic College of Tel Aviv Yaffo; and Shlomo Fischer (Research Consultant), Hebrew University and the Jewish People Policy Institute. The survey was carried out by Geocartography Knowledge Group (GCKG), Tel Aviv, Israel.

SAMPLING PROCEDURE

The survey instrument consisted of over 250 items covering a wide variety of religious, political, social, and economic issues, including questions on religious fundamentalism, perception of ingroup and out-group relations, and liberal values. It also includes a batteries of questions that were intended to capture the impact of the terrorist event of October 7, 2023 on the respondents' value orientations long-term concerns. The survey employed different mode of data collection. Given a high level of Internet penetration among Israeli Jews, an online method was used to contact the respondents. A total of 29,900 invitations were sent to potential respondents based on demographic quotas. Of this number 3,591 started the survey and 2,142 completed the survey. Israeli Muslims and Haredi Jews were contacted in person, presented a tablet that contained the questionnaire, and instructed on how to complete the questionnaire in the presence of the interviewer.

To reach these respondents a stratified random sampling technique was employed, systematically dividing each stratum based on the area of residence, settlement size, and socio-economic ranking. This ensured proportional representation within the final sample locations (100 Muslim, 30 Haredi), with approximately 10 interviews conducted at each location. To account for larger urban areas, certain cities were assigned multiple sampling locations, strategically selected for diverse representation. Interviewee selection followed a "skipping method." Interviewers kept to their right and attempted to conduct an interview in every 4th unit (apartment/house). Upon gaining entry, they sought the first eligible individual encountered, employing the "birthday method" (interviewing the person who has the next birthday) when multiple candidates were present - regardless of age or gender, - as long as they fit within the defined sampling parameters.

Overall, interviewers contacted nearly 7,200 individuals, initiating 1,500 interviews, and successfully completing 1,300 surveys. Before interviews, respondents received a general explanation of the research and were then provided a phone or tablet to complete the survey independently. Interviewers remained nearby to assist with technical questions but were instructed to avoid influencing the responses. To address content-related inquiries, they simply encouraged participants to respond to the best of their ability and understanding. Field sampling adhered to a strict no-quota approach, yet demographic characteristics were constantly monitored. As anticipated with stratified random sampling, the final survey demographics closely mirrored the broader population distribution. Finally, the observed difference in age distribution between the Jewish and Muslim groups is not an error but an accurate reflection of their respective demographics within the Israeli population.

Jewish respondents were interviewed in Hebrew and Muslim Arab in Arabic.
